DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

In 1855 John Tilley of Washington County, Arkansas, built a four-room brick house on the road between Prairie Grove and Rhea's Mill. This two-storey house, still on its original site, was built on a central hall plan with one room on either side. With the exception of the frame upper half of the hallway's east wall, all of the interior and exterior walls are of brick construction. The lower walls are sixteen inches thick, tapering to eight inches on the second storey.

When originally constructed the house had no porch on its facade, with only a flat stone slab marking the uncovered entry. About 1880 a two-storey porch was added across the facade. This porch featured a railing and decorative shingles at the second-storey line. In 1952 this Victorian era porch was removed and replaced with six square slender columns supporting the porch roof which projects from the front slope of the gable roof.

Sheltered by the two-storey porch is a five-bay-wide facade. Flanking the center entries are paired windows with double-hung sashes. The lower windows have flat arches with radiating voussoirs. The upper windows are shorter and are set in plain frames. Like the lower windows the main entry has a flat arch with radiating voussoirs. Sidelights above panels and a transom surround the single-door entry. The second-storey entry, set in a simple wood frame, was originally a window but enlarged to accommodate a doorway when the first porch was added.

Stacks from the interior chimneys project above the ridge line at the east and west elevations of the house. The corbelling on the east chimney is still in place, but that on the west has been removed. Windows on the rear elevation match those on the facade. The only side window was added in the 1890's to the lower west elevation.

About 1890 the house was enlarged with a two-storey frame addition on the west side of the rear elevation. This clapboard wing with gable roof houses the kitchen and dining room on the first floor and bedrooms on the second floor. This addition, which replaced the separate frame kitchen, gave the house an ell-shape floor plan. The one-storey porch around the south and east elevations of the frame wing was enclosed in 1952. A small porch northwest of the addition was enclosed in 1970.

Projecting from the west elevation of the brick house is a small, shed-roof cellar entry. From this covered entry, steps lead downward to the dirt-floored cellar which lies beneath the west room. Dug by John Tilley, this cellar is original to the house.

The interior of the Tilley House is relatively simple with wide baseboards and plain moulding around doors and windows. The original plaster is still in place on the brick walls. Pine flooring is used throughout with eight-inch-wide planks in the brick house and six-inch planks in the rear wing.

The Tilley House remains in excellent condition, and has been continually occupied and carefully maintained. Its peaceful rural setting has changed little in the century-and-a-quarter since the house was constructed.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Tilley House, located west of Prairie Grove on Rhea's Mill Road, was constructed about 1855. In comparison with the rest of the state, this area of northwest Arkansas was well-populated in the mid-nineteenth century. The Tilley House is one of several antebellum homes constructed in Washington County; however, the Tilley House is one of the few early brick houses to be built in a rural section of the county.

Before building their brick house, John Tilley and his family lived in a one-and-one-half-storey log house. About 1854 they began construction of their brick home on a site just northeast of the log cabin. When the brick house was completed in 1855, a covered walkway connected it to the log house, which thereafter served as kitchen and dining room. In the 1890's the log house was torn down and a frame wing, housing a kitchen, dining room and additional bedrooms, was added to the rear of the house.

The brick house built by John Tilley was a two-storey structure. Using bricks made about one-half mile southwest of the site, Tilley built walls which were sixteen inches thick on the first storey and half that width on the second storey. Plaster of lime, sand and hog hair covered the interior walls and was done with an egg-shell finish. The tongue-and-grove floors, pegged doors and simple window frames were all made from heart pine.

A native of Tennessee, John Tilley moved to Arkansas about 1845. Tilley was a successful farmer, and by 1860 owned property valued at over twelve thousand dollars. That same year he estimated his personal estate to be worth almost sixteen thousand dollars.

The Civil War brought great upheaval to the Tilley family. The oldest son, John Tilley, Jr., enlisted in the Confederate army and was killed in the Battle of Prairie Grove in 1862. Fought just a few miles east of the Tilley farm, this battle was considered to be a Union victory and led to the Civil War occupation of northwest Arkansas.

Several published memoirs of the Tilley family and their descendants record interesting events which occurred during the occupation. One account describes how wheat was hidden in the attic, removed through a hole in the roof, and taken by night to a nearby mill to be ground into flour. Another published story recounts Mrs. Tilley's successful efforts to have some Union troops expelled from her house and reprimanded by their commanding officer.

During the Federal occupation of Washington County, John Tilley and one of his sons fled to Texas. After the Civil War ended, but before he could return home, John Tilley died in Texas. The farm and house passed to his son, Joseph Tilley, who lived and worked there his entire lifetime.

A fourth generation of the Tilley family currently resides in the house built by John Tilley. John Buchanan, a grandson of Joseph Tilley, now owns and occupies the house.

This historic northwest Arkansas residence, architecturally important as an antebellum brick house, is significant as the home of one of the area's most prominent nineteenth century citizens. The Tilley House is an important historic landmark in the Prairie Grove area of Washington County.

Dear Anne:

After careful consideration, we are returning the nomination for the John Filley House because we are concerned that the 1950's alterations to the facade and roof have seriously compromised the visual integrity of the house as an example of rural 19th century architecture. From the information presented in the nomination, it would appear that the original appearance of the facade could be recaptured relatively easily, and we would prefer to delay our acceptance of this property for listing until a greater degree of integrity has been restored. If the State contemplates using grant funds to aid the owner in a facade restoration, we would be happy to review the nomination again.

We would be pleased to further discuss our decision with you or Diana.

Washington, D. C.

Dear Dr. Murtagh:

On September you returned the nomination of the John Tilley House in Washington County, Arkansas. Your comments indicated that alterations to the porch have detracted from the visual integrity of the house; however, as shown in the enclosed photograph (#4), the second 1880 porch is quite similar to the present 1952 porch (note the slope of the roof and the placement of the porch posts). In comparing the early photograph with a current photograph, the only significant difference lies in the second floor railing and trim. We believe these alterations are not sufficient to prevent the National Register listing of this property.

The Tilley House is significant not only architecturally, but also historically. Its proximity to the site of the Battle of Prairie Grove, as well as the Union occupation of the surrounding area, caused the house to be the scene of several war-related events during the Civil War. Locally, the house is important for its continuous occupation by the Tilley family, and as a familiar historic landmark on one of the oldest thoroughfares in northwest Arkansas.

We are returning the Tilley House nomination, along with uncompleted comments from your staff, and request that you review it in relation to the additional photograph enclosed, and in regard to its local significance concerning the family and Civil War events associated with the house. Please contact us by telephone if we may answer any new questions concerning this nomination.

Sincerely,

Anne Bartley

Re: John Tilley Home Washington Co.

In answer to your letter of Feb. 17, 1977 I am enclosing for your information an example of the several articles published in area newspapers and the Washington County Historical Association publication, Flashback, relating to the construction of and incidents of historical value involving this house and its occupants.

I am the youngest son of Dr. Herbert E. Buchanan and Ada Tilley Buchanan, and interested in preserving it for future generations as well as for my wife's and my five children. We have written to the Technical Preservation Services for any pertinent information, and await further information from the interested parties.

Very truly yours,

Two Union soldiers forced their way upstairs in the Tilley house where they began spitting tobacco juice on the walls until it ran down to the lower floor . . .

Old Times Are Not Forgotten At the Cloverdale Farm

By Robert Edmisten

WHILE RELAXING in her favorite chair, Mrs. H. E. Buchanan, 94, narrated several intriguing stories about herself, her ancestors and the house in which the family has lived continuously the last 120 years.

Mrs. Buchanan, the former Ada Tilley, is the last of the Tilley heritage to occupy the historic house located about five miles west of Prairie Grove on the Rhea Mill Road. Her grandfather, John Tilley Jr., built the antebellum mansion around 1855, using slave labor.

Mrs. Buchanan is the widow of Dr. Herbert Earl Buchanan, a well-known educator who died January 17 at the age of 92. The couple acquired the house and 195 acres — presently known as Cloverdale Farm — in 1950, after Dr. Buchanan retired with 52 years in the teaching profession. He at one time served as interim president of The College of the Ozarks in Clarksville for two years.

Buchanan enrolled at age 14 in the University of Arkansas, where he graduated in 1902. He received his Ph.D. degree from the University of Chicago in 1909, and later taught in several states. He was a member of the Washington County Historical Society, which recently published his "Memoirs."

He once remarked, "I taught about 10,000 students in my lifetime as a teacher." Many of his former pupils have since gone on to become college presidents, prominent physicians and engineers.

Mrs. Buchanan's son, John A. Buchanan, and his wife Marjorie, formerly from New Orleans, are in charge of running the farm.

Although Mrs. Buchanan is confined inside because of failing eyesight, the keen-witted "lady of the house" manages to keep up with current events by listening to the news on television and radio. Her daughter-in-law also reads to her.

ONE OF MRS. BUCHANAN'S favorite stories is about her step-grandmother, Martha Crawford Tilley, who could accurately tell the time of day by a mark she made on the doorstep of the porch. "When the sun's rays would strike a certain point on the step, she knew what time it was," Mrs. Buchanan related, noting that noontime was especially important for the Tilleys. "That was the dinner hour for everybody."

The house was masterfully constructed with brick on the outside, with every piece of wood tongued and grooved in place. The floors are original but have since been refinished. The brick was hardened in a nearby kiln, traces of which are still noticeable.

One of the most impressive interior features of the residence is the original staircase leading to the top floor. "The walls and ceilings contain the original plaster," Mrs. Buchanan said. "The hair of hogs was used to hold the plaster together — a common practice back then."

Some of the prized heirlooms in the two-story, nine-room dwelling include a chair dating back to 1853, hand-hewn beds which belonged to the first occupants, carpentry tools older than the house, an 1853 vintage secretary (writing desk), a baby cradle that served five generations of Tilleys and was particularly used during the Civil War, and a table and candle stand which Mrs. Buchanan estimated to be 200 years old.

The downstairs rooms each measure about 20 by 20 feet, with 10-foot high ceilings. The walls are 18 inches thick.

The house at one time was covered with a shake roof. Buchanan once described a shake as being a board split from a log two feet long, about one-half inch thick and four or five inches wide.

Plaster of the interior walls was applied to bricks wherever possible. When lathing was required on the ceilings, it was made by cutting small oak sapplings, splitting them after they were cut in 2½-foot lengths and nailing them to the frame work.

FOR A SHORT TIME during the Civil War, Union troops camped near the Tilley farm. During the Federal encampment, Tilley and his son braved harassment by bushwhackers, who eventually stole all the livestock on the farm.

take care of the children and an elderly black man helped with the chores.

The house was "fair game" for Union soldiers. One incident involved two army privates who forced their way upstairs, where they began spitting tobacco juice on the walls until it ran down to the lower floor. They also defaced the beds with their muddy boots, daring anyone to challenge their impudence.

As the story goes, Mrs. Tilley became so angry about the affair that she rushed to the Federal encampment and returned with the commanding officer, who commenced to beat the soldiers out of the house with the broadside of his sabre.

Food was scarce during the Union occupation, so the Tilley family devised a plan to hide their grain in the attic to prevent the soldiers from confiscating it. The attic was sealed off from the rest of the house and was an ideal hiding place. The family removed the carpets from the downstairs floors and put them across the attic rafters. The wheat was placed on the rugs for storing, and at night was sneaked out and taken to Rhea's Mill to be ground into flour.

The late H. E. Buchanan enjoyed recounting historical incidents concerning his family. His father, James Albert Buchanan, was born in 1844, and was a student at Cane Hill College when the Civil War erupted. He joined the Confederate army just after the Pea Ridge conflict and was in Capt. F. R. Earle's company, in which he served as a private for the remainder of the war.

Buchanan remembered his father telling about a certain visit he made during one of the winter encampments. He had heard that a family named Buchanan was living nearby and was eager to check out the land. He tidied himself up for the trip, blackening his shoes from the bottom of a skillet, brushing his Confederate uniform and walking two miles to the residence. After summoning the lady of the house to the door and inquiring about her name, she snapped at Buchanan: "Got no kin-folk this side of the Mississippi River." She then slammed the door in his face.

ALBERT BUCHANAN was known for his exceptional ability in laying out tracts of land. He was regarded as one of the best surveyors around the area, and his work was so accurate that the Frisco Railroad Company employed him to lay out the land lines so the railroad would know whose land they were crossing.

Despite her age, Mrs. Buchanan has retained a keen sense of humor and treasures her memories of the Tilley house.

"You know," she said, "Mr. Buchanan and I were married in the east room of this house in 1904. We would have celebrated our 70th wedding anniversary later this year if he had lived."
