Describe the present and original (if known) physical appearance

The home of Governor Richard Yates Jr. was designed in the Romanesque and modified Queen Anne styles, in 1904-05.

The main entrance is on the southwest with access through an archway onto a covered porch.

The first floor plan is basically symmetrical (as the sketch shows) but unusual for the non-traditional use of space in a home. The home has no foyer but instead a grand hall which joins the other rooms.

The dining room, parlor, and turret open into the grand hall with oversize openings and no doors.

The turret has doors on both the north and south with three large curved windows on the west.

The fireplace landing is set back from the grand hall and raised three steps.

The six Ionic columns are around the grand hall—four of which serve a structural purpose and two decorative.

The ten foot wide open hall on the second floor is a balcony overlooking the fireplace landing.

On the second floor there are six bedrooms and three baths

The exterior of the home is large smooth river rock foundation with the first floor walls of cut stone. The second floor and gables are painted wood shingles. The carriage house is of the same type of construction and also has a basement and attic as does the home.

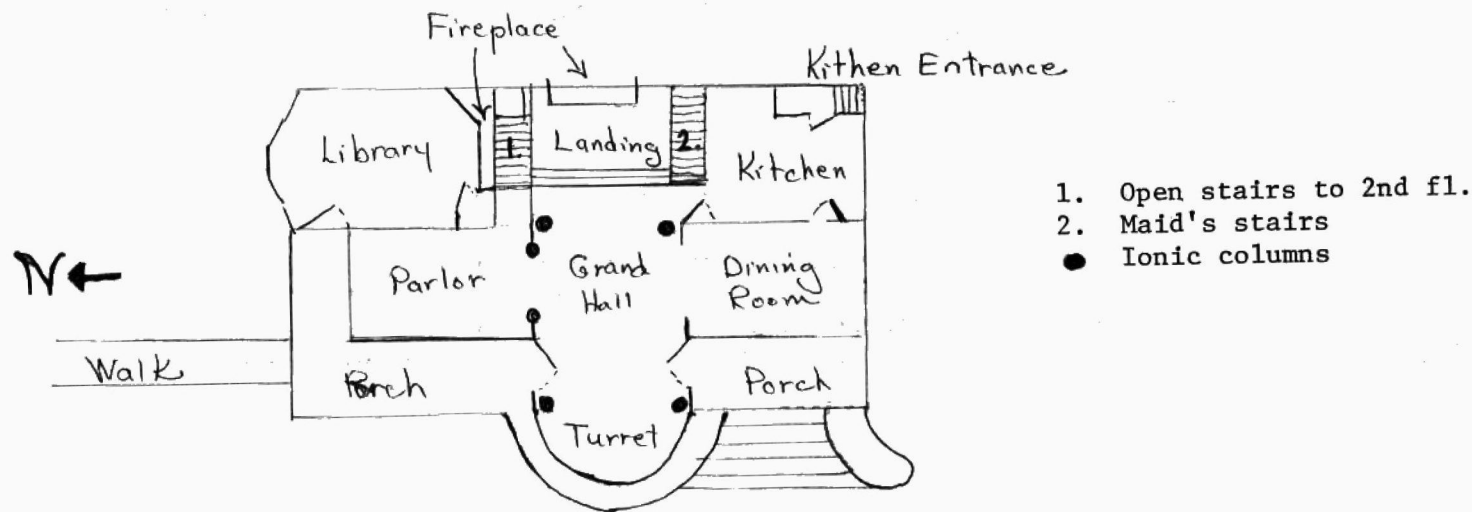

On the west face of the home is the turret—two stories tall of cut stone. The circular shape is capped by a cone shaped roof and a copper lightning rod.

The drive, in its original position and orientation to the house and carriage house, is now bituminous instead of shale.

Interior changes consist of:

1. Late 1920's; paneling the unfinished library in walnut,
2. Late 1920's; covering the cobblestone fireplace with a facade of marble and wood. (The cannon ball given to Gov. Yates Sr. (the Civil War Governor) is still embedded in the stonework.)
3. Early 1960's; converting of the NE bedroom to a chapel for the use of the Episcopal Bishop—presently again being used as a bedroom.
4. Late 1970's; modernizing of the kitchen for use by present owners.

There are no significant exterior changes except for the roof shingles and the style of the carriage house doors.

Statement of Significance (in one paragraph)

The home of Governor Richard Yates Jr. was designed by the prominently known local architectural firm of Helme & Helmle. The use of cut stone for this residence was unusual as George H. Helmle did not use cut stone except on non-residential designs. The firm over a period of 75 years designed over 400 buildings, contributing significantly to the appearance of the city. James Culver worked closely with the Helmle firm as he was the chief supplier of stone in the central Illinois area.

The home designed and built specifically for a political figure has many characteristics found in public buildings, including areas for large gatherings, office space(library), and elevated areas for speeches, but also has privacy for a growing family.

On the first floor the location of the two doors in the turret allow guests to enter on the south, greet the hosts, visit, and exit on the north and not interfere with the flow of traffic. The large openings into the grand hall allow for the expansion of the diningroom across the hall into the parlor for large dinner parties. The fireplace landing, three steps up from the grand hall, makes a raised platform from which to address guests and make after dinner speeches. The six Ionic columns give the first floor a feeling of stability and importance. The extra wide hall on the second floor gives the family privacy when it was necessary to use the bedrooms if functions were going on downstairs. The turret, a large rounded projection on the west, is surrounded by a wall and walkway of rock and stone that rises from the gently falling contours of the landscape. The wall and walk above the lawn is reminiscent of the portico porch at the Illinois Governor's Mansion, again a ideal place for speeches and addresses.

The home is located adjacent to Washington Park in Orendorff Place, developed by J. F. MacPherson. At the turn of the century and into the teens Orendorff Place was the newest and most prestigious area of the city, With only a hundred homes being built within its forty acres of woodland park.

Born in Jacksonville, Illinois in 1860 to the soon to be Governor and Mrs. Yates Sr. young Richard was very involved in politics. He attended local schools and graduated from Illinois College in Jacksonville as class orator in 1880. He was immediatly admitted to the bar in Michigan and Illinois when he graduated from the law school at Michigan University in 1884. In 1888 he married Helen Wadworth a popular, strong-willed, society miss. They had two daughters Dorothy and Catharine.

Before becoming governor Richard Yates Jr. served as City Attorney in Jacksonville, County Judge in Morgan County, State Public Utilities Commissioner under Gov. Dunn, and Assistant States Attorney General.

Governor Yates was the first governor of Illinois born in Illinois; the first son of a governor to be governor; he was the first gubernatorial candidate to use a special train as a means of campaigning around the state; when elected governor in 1900, he won by the greatest victory ever witnessed in Illinois history; during his term as governor Richard Yates entertained his friend and sometimes advisee President Theodore Roosevelt three times in Springfield; After leaving the office of governor Richard Yates served in Congress for six terms (1919-1933). His death in 1936 ended a dominant and politically active life.
