CONDITION
DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Peabody City Hall is a three-story rectangular structure with a high basement and mansard roof. The main block of the building measures 106' by 90'. The projecting vestibule and portico on the Lowell Street side measures 54' by 30'. The principal entrance to the building is on the north or Lowell Street side. Chestnut Street lies to the east and Church Street to the south and west.

Directly adjacent to Peabody City Hall are several other mid- and late nineteenth century buildings, which are generally well preserved and of good quality. Diagonally across Lowell Street is the fire station of the late 19th century, which in its materials (brick and granite) and details (arched windows and oculi) appears to have been designed to complement the City Hall. On Chestnut Street there is a row of wooden houses, most of which, with the exception of a funeral home, are free of inappropriate remodellings and retain most of their original detail. Other buildings of note are the Catholic Church, convent buildings and two Greek Revival houses to the rear of the City Hall.

The material of the City Hall building is brick with a rusticated foundation and all trim of granite from Hallowell, Maine. Granite curbing, apparently original surrounds the building lot. The present roofing material is asphalt shingles. The small central cupola is faced with copper.

One of the most distinctive exterior features of the building is its mansard roof, which as four straight-sided corner pavillions and a larger central one in which is located the principal entrance. The curved roof of the central pavillion is crowned with the small copper-clad cupola with a round headed window on each of the four sides. Two small round windows or oculi are found at the roof level on each of the projecting central bays of the east and west sides of the building.

The treatment of the walls is similar on all four sides of the building. The present new windows have frames of bronze-anodized aluminum and are double-hung sash with single panes of plate glass. Wooden panels are used on the upper parts of most windows. The basement and first-floor windows have plain granite lintels; those on the second floor have granite segmental arches and those on the third floor have curved arches of granite with keystones. The sills and lintels of the windows are continued as string courses all the way around the building, with the exception of the second-floor arches, which are separate. The architrave of the entablature also consists of a granite string course. Panel-brick detailing simulating triglyphs and metopes is used in the frieze above.

The central bay of the main facade is distinguished by an entrance portico supported by granite columns with composite capitals. The double doors are approached by a divided granite staircase. Above the entablature is a triangular pediment, capped by the curved roof of the center pavillion.

Although extensive exterior renovations have been done in the past year, the exterior of the Peabody City Hall remains very close to its original condition and appearance. These renovations included replacing the windows, pointing the brickwork and sandblasting the granite trim. The slate roof was replaced by asphalt shingling. The roof originally had copper cresting and oculi on the central and corner pavillions, and there was originally a balustrade above the central portico.

7. Description

In 1928 tracings were done by George A. Barnaby of the architect's original plans. These show a somewhat different treatment of the central bay with no portico and slightly different fenestration. The second-floor windows, like those on the first floor, were to have had plain lintels rather than arches. Modifications in these plans were apparently made by the architect at the request of the building committee.

Although there have been some remodellings, particularly on the basement level, the interior of the Peabody City Hall retains its 19th century character. The vestibule contains two curving staircases leading to the Auditorium above. On the first floor is a large hall, now the Council Chamber, measuring 42' by 60' and seating 500. The most significant interior feature of the building is, however, the Auditorium, which, with stage and balcony, takes up the entire second and third floor levels. This Auditorium measures 102' by 70' with a minimum height of 33' and has a seating capacity of 1500. This hall has been allowed to deteriorate over the years, but it is in restorable condition. Of special interest are the remaining gas chandeliers; the balcony rail of cast iron finished with copper bronze; and the ceiling decorations done by Matthew L. Robinson of Boston, who also painted the original scenery and drop curtain.

8. Significance

Victoria sent a cablegram expressing the gratitude of her people for George Peabody's benevolence to her country. Included in the centennial activities was a banquet for 630 formally attired guests, who were served a variety of shellfish cooked five different ways, four kinds of fowl and game and three meat dishes, plus eight desserts and miscellaneous side dishes, after which a ball was held, affording much needed exercise.

The hall was used for many Essex County activities -- agricultural fairs, poultry exhibitions, teachers association conventions and Hibernian Society celebrations. In one peak year, as many as fifty organizations used the facilities, even including a show put on by the Kickapoo Indian Medicine Company to promote its remedies.

In 1916 Peabody became a city and shortly thereafter 1,500 citizens attended the inauguration of Peabody's first city government. The Great Hall was the scene of political rallies, church jubilees and in 1919, as part of the World War One Victory Celebration, 1,900 spectators watched boxing bouts. In 1922, 2,000 people attended a football rally. As the Great Hall seated only 1,500, some 400 or 500 spectators at these last events must have overflowed into the hallways outside. A high point in entertainment took place in 1936 when Governor James M. Curley was the featured speaker. In 1941 a large banquet in the hall climaxed the celebration commemorating twenty-five years of city government.

The Peabody High School graduation was held there for the last time in 1946, after which the final curtain fell on great events in the hall. At this time the State public safety officials prohibited the use of the Great Hall until extensive renovations could be made. As other, newer auditorium facilities in the city had already lessened the need for this space, city officials were reluctant to spend the money to rehabilitate it.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The City Hall in Peabody, built in 1883 as a Town Hall, is tremendously significant in the city's history, not only as the scene of local governmental activity but equally as the center of cultural and social affairs. As the town's population was 9,028, objections were raised to the size of the proposed building, a size since proven completely justified. The annual town meeting was of first importance and the raison d'etre for the construction of the Great Hall within. Because of the foresight of the town fathers, this large auditorium remained adequate to contain those citizens who wished to attend town meeting until Peabody became a city in 1916. At this time the population had grown to 18,625.

In the basement were the police court and headquarters, jail cells and the "transient quarters." On the first floor were town offices and the small hall seating 500. On the second floor with open space extending to the third was the aforementioned Great Hall. For many years this large hall with its balcony on three sides and stage on the fourth was the locale of nearly every important event in Peabody, beginning with the impressive dedication in 1883, attended by about 1,500 people.

For sixty-two years, from 1884 to 1946, the Peabody High School held its commencement exercises here. One of the earliest cultural events was a production of the opera "Virginia," produced by the Boston Bijou Theatre Company and attended by 1,000 people. To raise funds, various groups presented a miscellany of plays and entertainments, ranging from "Our Boys" (1890) and "Crown of Fame" (1891) put on by the Women's Relief Corps No. 52, to the Peabody Women's Club production of "A Midsummer Night's Dream" (1909). "Heroes of '76," described as a "dramatic cantata of the Revolution," was presented in aid of the Ladies Benevolent Society (1885) and in the early 1900's, musical comedies were popular, such as the 1913 "Little Em'ly," an offering by the Peabody I. O. O. F.

As the seats in the hall were removeable, the space could be converted and opened up for dining and dancing. A Japanese wedding and party were celebrated there and, at a later date, a Firemen's Ball, attended by over 800 people, hardy souls who danced until 5:30 a. m. In 1904 the Peabody Board of Trade held a Ladies' Night with a banquet and entertainment.

One of the most successful events in the hall took place on February 18, 1895. Afternoon and evening exercises celebrated the centennial of the birth of George Peabody, "America's first great philanthropist," for whom the town was named and whose charities not only encompassed this country but also extended across the Atlantic to Great Britain. In recognition of this celebration, Queen

Of course all town and city hall activity did not take place in the Great Hall as various forms of celebration and amusement. The serious business of a rapidly growing community was conducted in the city hall offices, while elsewhere drunks and tramps were being housed in the basement "transient quarters" and the City Council meetings were being held in the smaller hall on the first floor.

The Peabody City Hall is a fine and unusually well preserved example of late 19th-century civic architecture. The building is in the French mansard or Second Empire style, first used widely in this country in the 1860's and 1870's, although its continued use in the 1880's was not common. Boston's Old City Hall (1862-65) was undoubtedly the prototype as it was for so many other city and town halls near Boston during this period. Although the choice of the mansard style was a bit old-fashioned for the date (1883), the simplicity of wall surfaces and the absence of elaborate pilasters, moldings, etc. mark the building as belonging to the early 1880's. The panel-brick detailing in the entablature is also a characteristic feature in buildings of the 1870's and 1880's.

The architect, Rufus Sargent (1812-1886), lived in Newburyport for over forty years. His practice during the larger part of his life was primarily local and limited to Essex County and southern New Hampshire. Sargent appears to have been typical of the builder-architects of the period, whose work, in spite of a lack of formal architectural training, often shows remarkable sensitivity and sophistication. As Essex County and southern New Hampshire are more thoroughly surveyed, it will undoubtedly be possible to document his career more completely.

Today, with a population of over 48,000, the City of Peabody still appreciates and enjoys its City Hall. Rather than consider construction of a new building, they prefer to rehabilitate the existing one. To date, nearly $200,000 has been spent on repointing the brick exterior, installing a new roof and reglazing the windows. Once the Great Hall area is strengthened and rebuilt for new usage and other areas reorganized, it can serve commodiously the city's purposes for at least another 100 years.

Dear Rog:

It has been brought to my attention, application has been filed with the National Register of Historic Places for the City Hall of Peabody, Massachusetts to be designated a National Historical Landmark.

The Peabody City Hall has already been designated a Historical Landmark by the Massachusetts Historical Commission. The case for adding the National designation is, I believe, persuasive.

I hope that it will be possible for you to review the application, and to direct the Peabody City Hall to be designated a National Historical Landmark.

Very warmest personal regards.

Dear Sir:

To correct a misunderstanding, I noticed in a copy of the letter sent to you by Senator Edward W. Brooke of Massachusetts that the Peabody City Hall was proposed as a National Historical Landmark.

What it should of stated was that the City Hall was approved by the Massachusetts Historical Commission for the National Register of Historical Places. The application is for it to be considered for the National Register, and not as a National Historical Landmark.

Dear Dr. Murtagh:

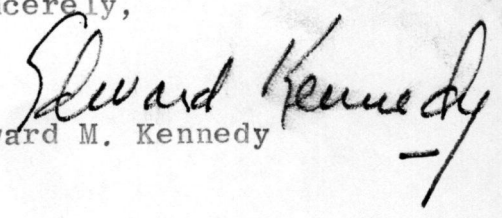

I am writing in reference to an application by the Peabody Historical Commission to have the City Hall included on the National Register of Historic Places.

The Massachusetts Historical Commission and the Massachusetts Revolutionary War Bi-Centennial Commission have approved the designation of this historic building. I believe it meets the criteria set up by the National Register as a tangible reminder of the history of the United States and a "cultural property that is worth saving".

Therefore I join with the Peabody Historical Commission in urging prompt consideration of this application and I look forward to hearing of a favorable decision in the near future.

With best wishes,
