DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The John Spurr House is on the easterly side of Common Road (Main Street) opposite the Charlton Common in Charlton Center. To the east of the house is a wide expanse of open fields and woodlands and to the south are professional, educational and municipal buildings of the town. Across the Common and to the north are other residences, dating primarily from the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries.

The John Spurr House was built in the late eighteenth century - early records showing General Spurr first taxed for a house worth $1500 in 1798. The two-story dwelling is 34½ feet wide and 30 feet deep, with an ell measuring 20½ feet by 21½ feet at the rear (east). The ell may be of a slightly earlier period but is essentially contemporary with the house. From the kitchen ell a two-story garage and shed extends north at a right angle.

The foundation of the house is of dry fieldstone construction, topped with granite slabs. The house and ell are covered with clapboards painted white on the main house and red on the shed. The house, ell, and shed sections all have ridge roofs covered with black asphalt shingles. Two brick chimneys rise through the peak of the roof of the main house.

The facade is five bays wide with shuttered windows having six-over-six lights. The center entrance is flanked with fluted pilasters which have plain capitals and support a dentiled entablature.

The south side of the house has two equally spaced windows on each story and a side entrance in the middle of the first story. This six-paneled door is surmounted by simple molding, and an open elliptical topped lattice work entry surrounds the door. There is a single window in the center of the gable.

The north elevation is identical to the south, without the door. There is a single window and door in the north wall of the one-story kitchen ell which extends to the east. The two-story shed extends north from the ell and has a garage on the lower floor and a workshop in the upper story which is a few steps down from the kitchen level.

Several barns and sheds which were on the property were severely damaged in the 1938 hurricane and subsequently removed.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The John Spurr House is significant as the home of Major General John Spurr, a leader in Charlton affairs and participant in the Boston Tea Party and various Revolutionary War encounters. The house is also one of the more interesting architectural examples in Charlton.

John Spurr was born in Stoughton, Massachusetts on May 31, 1759. As a young man, Spurr was among the group of patriots who threw overboard the hated tea from the ships Dartmouth and Eleanor at Griffin's Wharf in Boston on December 16, 1773. Following the Boston Tea Party, he was among the ranks which fought at the Battle of Bunker Hill. Commissioned an officer on January 1, 1777, Spurr served in Colonel Nixon's 4th Massachusetts Regiment until 1779 when he transferred to the 6th Regiment as a major in 1780 and again in 1791-1792.

John Spurr moved to Charlton in 1788 to take up title to 3000 acres of confiscated Tory lands acquired through his wife. Spurr soon entered the social and political life of the area. Called Colonel at the time of his second marriage, he later became a Major General of the State Militia. His marriage to Sally Davis and his daughter's marriage to Salem Town, Jr. united the three most influential families in the south county.

In politics General Spurr was a strong Jeffersonian Democrat, opposing the Federalists which were represented by the Town family. Spurr was elected to the General Court in 1805-1811. He died on March 3, 1816.

John Spurr's sons followed his example in service to the town and state. John Spurr, Jr. (born May 30, 1783 in Stoughton) married Sally Wheelock of Charlton in 1810. He served as major in the militia, Justice of the Peace, Representative to the General Court in 1820-1824, state senator, and representative to the Constitutional Convention of 1820. Major Spurr operated a store and hotel at Charlton Center for many years.

A second son of General Spurr, Samuel D. Spurr, lived in the Charlton homestead and also served as representative to the General Court. Samuel was a colonel in the militia and active in the Universalist Society. He later moved to Worcester, Massachusetts where he ran a store, was a trustee of the Worcester Seminary, director of a bank and one of the directors of Worcester's first Horticultural Society.

Architecturally, the John Spurr House is one of Charlton's finest houses. Although there is a grouping of similar houses north of Charlton Center on Stafford Road, the Spurr House is the only house of eighteenth century vintage in the Common area. A feature of the house which makes it unique in Charlton is the hinged paneled common wall between the second-story north chambers which can be swung up to create a larger room for social functions.

Spurr House in Charlton Accepted as Historic Site

CHARLTON — The John Spurr House on Main street has been accepted for inclusion in the National Register of Historic Places by the Historical Commission.

The Spurr House, the property of Mrs. James Tansey, is the only structure of 18th century vintage in the Charlton Common area.

The acceptance of the house was recommended by the state Historical Commission, according to Paul Guzzi, Secretary of State, who also serves as commission chairman. The house was the home of Maj. Gen. John Spurr, a leader in town affairs who participated in the Boston Tea Party and Revolutionary War encounters.

A feature of the house is the hinged paneled common wall between the second story north chambers which can be moved up to create a larger room for social functions.

In politics, town records show General Spurr to be a strong Jeffersonian Democrat, opposing the Federalists. Spurr was elected to the General Court in 1805 and served to 1811. His sons followed his governmental service.

John Spurr Jr. served as a major in the militia, a justice of the peace, a state representative from 1820 to 1824 and state senator and representative to the Constitutional Convention in 1820. He operated a store and a hotel in Charlton Center for many years.

Another son, Samuel D. Spurr, lived in the Charlton homestead and also served as a state representative and as a colonel in the militia. He was active in the Universalist Society. He moved to Worcester, where he operated a store and was a trustee of the Worcester Seminary and a director of Worcester's first Horticultural Society.

John Spurr was born in Stoughton in 1759 and as a young man, was among the group of patriots who threw tea overboard from the "Dartmouth" and "Eleanor" ships in Boston Harbor in 1773. After the Boston Tea Party, Spurr was among the ranks which fought at the Battle of Bunker Hill. Commissioned in 1777, he served on Col. Nixon's 4th Massachusetts Regiment until 1779, when he transferred to the 6th regiment as a major.

Spurr moved to Charlton in 1788 to take title to 3,000 acres of confiscated Tory lands acquired through his wife. He was later named a major general of the state militia and was prominent in social and political circles. His marriage to Sally Davis and his daughter's marriage to Salem Town Jr., united three of the most influential families in southern Worcester County.
