NATIONAL REGISTER CRITERIA STATEMENT (if applicable)

The Edwin Johnson Three-Decker possesses integrity of location, design, setting, materials, workmanship, feeling and association. It is significant as a representative example of the multi-family residences built in the ethnic, working-class neighborhood that developed in the Piedmont district west of downtown Worcester at the end of the 19th century. It is also an unusually well-preserved and well-detailed example of local Queen Anne style three-decker design. The Johnson Three-Decker thus meets criteria A and C of the National Register of Historic Places on the local level.

ARCHITECTURAL SIGNIFICANCE Describe important architectural features and evaluate in terms of other buildings within the community.

Architecturally, 183 Austin Street is an unusually well-preserved and well-detailed example, representative of the late 19th century, local Queen Anne style three-decker designs. The house has the characteristic side-hall plan with side-wall jog. It is clad in wood clapboard, and has a hip roof. The asymmetrical main facade contains an entry bay with a three-tier porch, which features lathe-turned posts, cut brackets, and spindle friezes and balustrades. The porch is flanked by a three-story bay window, unusual for the use of paired, 1/1 sash windows in the front of the angled bay. Windows throughout have simple, bracketed caps. Regularly spaced brackets decorate the roof cornice overhang.

HISTORICAL SIGNIFICANCE Explain the role owners played in local or state history and how the building relates to the development of the community.

In the late 19th century, an ethnically mixed, working-class, multi-family residential district developed in the low-lying Piedmont area west of downtown beyond Crown Hill. Built ca. 1892, 183 Austin Street was part of an early boom of three-decker construction scattered throughout this area. The earliest known owner of the house was Edwin E. Johnson, a machinist, who resided here for over a decade, and who by 1900 operated his own local machine shop. Tenants in 1892 included C.H. Spaulding, a salesman; and Arthur Livermore, a clerk. Residents in 1900 included A.B. Morton, a printer; Charles Tower, a cutter; and L.H. Rodebaugh and W.S. Griffith, telegraphers. By 1910, the house was owned by Dean Ellis, a local physician who owned seven other houses and sixteen building lots in the city at that time. Tenants in 1910 included Leon Dwinell, a picture framer; and Albert Macumber, a plumber. By 1920, the building was owned by Nathan Patrick, who owned eight other city houses. By the 1920s, the Piedmont area had become a focus of Worcester's growing Armenian ethnic community, and by 1930, most of Austin Street had Armenian residents. Tenants of 183 Austin included Michal Markorian, a helper; and Kasper Hamparsooian, a shoemaker; as well as Cornelius Sullivan, a freight handler.
