DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Perched on a rise overlooking the flood plain of the Green River is a rambling two-story house called Green River Plantation. It is composite of three major construction periods. It started as a frame Federal-style house facing west. During the Greek Revival period a separate two-story brick structure of similar proportions was built slightly to the rear (east) of the structure, facing south. Early in the twentieth century these two structures were united with a two-story section. At this time numerous additions and improvements were made throughout, yet the integrity of the two earlier structures was preserved.

The oldest section of the house is two full stories high and four bays wide. It has a gable roof with boxed eaves, plain siding, and dormers most likely added in the twentieth century. For the most part, windows contain nine-over-nine double-hung sash and have molded architraves and sills. The south side appears to have the original configuration of the gable ends; a central chimney flanked by two standard windows at each level with six-over-six sash in the attic. The doorway, placed in the second bay from the right, retains its original treatment, having four-pane sidelights flanked by fluted pilasters (with exaggerated entasis) supporting a frieze with an arched opening, with a molded cornice.

The brick Greek Revival-style section is also four bays wide with a gable roof. The wide cornice is decorated at the top with a variation of the bead-and-reel motif with an exaggerated oval bead. Evidence indicates that this cornice continued along the east gable end, forming a pediment with a fanlight in the tympanum. An interior chimney pierces the roof between the first and second east bays.

The twentieth century section connecting the two structures is unified under a continuation of the main roof of the brick wing. The windows are similar to those on the Federal part, but the main door in the second bay from the left on the south side has sidelights and transom surrounded by symmetrically molded architraves with faceted corner blocks.

Numerous additions were made to the previous structure in the early twentieth century including a two-story gable roof addition to the west side (the first floor being open), a one-story brick wing on the east, a servants wing from the second floor extending north over the driveway, two-tier porches (some enclosed) on the remainder of the north and west sides, and a two-tier porch across the south side of the brick section.

The Federal section has a hall-and-parlor plan downstairs and two rooms to either side of the central hall above. Architectural elements which occur in this section of the house are a flat-paneled wainscot (consisting of double rows of rectangular panels), three-part architraves, some early six-panel doors, sheathing in the walls and ceiling, and a molded cornice. Mantels have three-part architraves surrounding the opening with a flat-paneled frieze flanked by frieze blocks over which the heavily molded shelf breaks out. The most interesting of these, larger in size and of a different configuration, is in the south room of the first floor. The flat frieze with fluted end blocks to each side is painted with a landscape scene. What was formerly an exterior doorway (now connecting the south room with the hall) is of similar configuration to the west entrance previously mentioned but has no fanlight or frieze. The hall occupying the space between the two sections features a twentieth century open-string stair with turned balusters.

The Greek Revival section has two rooms to a floor separated by a partition wall containing the central chimney. The walls are plastered and have a molded chair rail. The architraves of the windows, doors, and fireplace surrounds are symmetrically molded with flat, faceted, or roundel corner blocks.

Many outbuildings are present on the property, including a twentieth century log cabin, other log and frame buildings, and a family chapel at the summit of the hill behind the house. The simple Gothic Revival frame chapel is sided with weatherboards and is sheathed in the interior, with narrow boards forming vertical, diagonal and herringbone patterns. The delicate freestanding rood screen, indicative of the sprightly interior woodwork, is composed of trefoil arches under pointed arches with a band of pierced triangles at the crest.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Green River is an imposing and well detailed plantation house that was the home of Joseph McDowell Carson, a member of the politically prominent Carson family. It later was acquired by industrial magnate Franklin Coxe. Originally a single Federal structure, the house is an interesting composite of additions up to the twentieth century.

Joseph McDowell Carson, the probable builder of Green River Plantation, was the son of Colonel John Carson, an early settler of Burke County and a Revolutionary soldier. Joseph left his father's home, Pleasant Gardens, and settled in Rutherford County where in 1807 he bought 600 acres on both sides of Green River for $3,000. Tradition says that he built the plantation house called Green River in 1804. This would not seem probable considering the date of his deed. It would seem possible, on the other hand, that William Walton, from whom Carson bought the land, had built a house after settling there in 1799. The possible existence of this house would account for the relatively high purchase price. In 1817, by way of comparison, Carson was able to buy more than 100 acres adjoining this tract for only $20.00. Carson married sometime soon after buying Green River Plantation and, if he did not build a new house, may have begun the first series of alterations or improvements so evident in the present structure. Stylistically the Federal block could have been built during either Walton's or Carson's ownership; tradition credits it to Carson, and it was certainly he who built the Greek Revival section.

Joseph McDowell Carson was a distinguished lawyer and represented Rutherford County in the North Carolina House of Commons in 1813 and 1814. He was elected to the state senate in 1832, 1836, and 1838. He was a delegate to the Constitutional Convention of 1835 and was a commissioner for the implementation of the public school plan provided for by the resultant amended constitution.

A person of note whom Joseph McDowell Carson brought to live with him at Green River was his half-brother, Samuel Price Carson. When only twenty-four, Samuel Carson embarked on a political career as a United States senator and later as an officer in Sam Houston's government of Texas. He was married at Green River in 1831 to the sister of Joseph McDowell Carson's wife. In the course of his political career, he was involved in one of North Carolina's most famous duels. When Dr. Robert Vance questioned his father's honor, Carson challenged him and in the subsequent duel mortally wounded him.

Vance was the uncle of Civil War Governor Zebulon Vance, perhaps the most esteemed North Carolinian of his day.

The Agricultural Schedule of the United States Census of 1860 indicates Green River was then a plantation of 1,745 acres with a valuation of $15,000. There were at that time twenty-five slaves. Carson died in 1860.

Green River was put up for sale and bought by Franklin Coxe, who had married there in 1861 a kinswoman of the Carsons, Mary Mills. When the house became available in 1878, he bought it for $6,005, together with the 535-acre tract. Coxe was a grandson of Tench Coxe of Philadelphia, assistant secretary of the United States Treasury, and, under Thomas Jefferson, "purveyor of public supplies." For his work in developing the cotton industry, Tench Coxe has been called the "Father of American Cotton Industry." Franklin Coxe was president of the Commercial National Bank at Charlotte when he bought Green River Plantation. It became his summer home when he moved to Philadelphia in 1882. Coxe, who was instrumental in the development of Asheville, was associated with A. B. Andrews in the building of the Western North Carolina Railroad and built Asheville's Battery Park Hotel, "the first modern hotel in the state," which opened in 1886. When Coxe died at Green River in 1903, the house went to his youngest daughter, Maude Coxe. It is now owned by John J. Crowder of Rutherfordton, North Carolina.
