DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

✓ The Herbert House consists of an original brick, two-story block facing east with the addition of a brick rear ell and frame two-story wing forming a U-shaped plan overall. A two-level front porch with the second story enclosed has been added to the east front. The original brick block utilizes the full range of eighteenth-century masonry techniques. The brick is laid in Flemish bond with English bond used below the beveled watertable; random glazing of the header bricks as well as rubbed brick at the window and door jambs and at the corners enrich the brick pattern. The use of a belt course and gauged brick flat arches completes the design. Original wood members include floor joists and sub-flooring, rafters, window sill and framing. The most dramatic interior changes have been the removal of the north wall of the central stair hall creating one large room on the north end of the original block; the wall at the rear of the old stair hall was removed and the nineteenth-century stair partially projects into the brick rear ell. All interior woodwork seems to date from the mid to late nineteenth century.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Herbert House is the oldest standing house in Hampton, and one of the oldest buildings on the lower Peninsula. The house, which faces the Hampton River on Armstrong Point, was built in the mid eighteenth century; it remained in the possession of the Herbert family until 1808. There followed several changes in ownership during the ante-bellum period; and, in 1865, Herbert House, like many another southern home-place, came into the possession of a northerner.

As befits long-term denizens of a site on open water, both Herbert family and House have associations with naval history. In 1718, the empaled head of the pirate, Blackbeard, was posted here as a warning to his former colleagues still plying their trade in the Chesapeake-Albemarle Sound region. Lieutenant Pascow (a proprietor of the Herbert House) and Captain Thomas Herbert held commissions in the Navy of Virginia during the Revolution; a kinsman was Secretary of the Navy during the Cleveland Administration.

The Herbert House remains as a relatively scarce example of early, two-story, single-rooms-deep brick structures. It has superb Georgian brickwork, refined masonry detailing, and retains most of its structural wood framing. Although suffering somewhat from additions, it has considerable value and significance to the architectural history of State and region.
