DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Mecklenburg County Courthouse, built 1838-42 by William A. Howard, is a large, two-story Roman Revival building which stands at the principal intersection of Boydton. The courthouse is built of brick laid in Flemish bond on the front and three-course American bond with Flemish variant on the sides. The brickwork was painted white in recent years, giving the building a more monumental aspect than originally intended. It is five bays wide and five bays deep and is lighted by large six-over-six sash. The principal entrance is in the central bay of the gable end, and there are other doorways in the central bays of the sides. A hexastyle Ionic portico, with plastered-brick piers and wooden capitals having angle volutes, marks the facade, and its modillion cornice is carried around the entire building.

The interior of the courthouse has been altered. It originally had a two-story courtroom with a rear gallery, but the space is now divided into two floors with offices on the first floor and the courtroom on the second. Little of the original trim survives except for a plain stair in the entrance hall.

A two-story Edwardian ell was added to the rear of the building early in the twentieth century. In the process, an unusual apse like that on the earlier Lunenburg Courthouse, by the same builder, was destroyed.

The courthouse is scenically set in a shaded square surrounded by nineteenth-century commercial buildings. It is complemented by a small, turn-of-the-century brick clerk's office, also painted white, and by the customary Confederate monument.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Mecklenburg County Courthouse, set in its square at the principal crossroads of Boydton, is one of an important group of architecturally related early-nineteenth-century county courthouses in Virginia. Like most of the others, it is set in a small square with a separate clerk's office and a later Confederate monument, is located in a small village established as a result of the courthouse's existence, and is built in a Roman Revival style influenced by the architectural works of Thomas Jefferson.

Mecklenburg County and Charlotte County were set off from Lunenburg County in 1764. In March, 1765, the first court sessions were held at the house of Richard Swepson, about one-half mile north of the present Boydton. It was decided at that time that Swepson should erect a proper courthouse for the county, and a brick and frame building was put up near the site of the present clerk's office.

Swepson's grandson, Alexander Boyd, Jr., in 1811 donated to the county the two acres of land on which the courthouse and clerk's office stood. A year later he deeded to a group of trustees fifty acres for a town, officially chartered by the General Assembly as Boyd Town.

By the 1830s, the county had outgrown its court facilities, and William A. Howard, the builder of the earlier Lunenburg County Courthouse, began to erect a new one for Mecklenburg in 1838 and completed it in 1842. With its temple form and red brick with white trim, the courthouse followed the pattern set by the public buildings designed by Thomas Jefferson, most notably his courthouses for Buckingham (1823, now destroyed) and Charlotte (1823) Counties. The recent coat of white paint on the building highlights its particular resemblance to Jefferson's Virginia State Capitol at Richmond, with which it shares a hexastyle Ionic portico, modillion cornice, five-bay facade and side entrances.
