Motivated Immigrants Make Queens Library Busiest in U.S.

By BLAINE HARDEN
Washington Post Staff Writer

A NEW YORK, April 27—Pin-Pin Lin treks twice a week with her two sons and a big shopping bag to a crowded library in the borough of Queens. The Taiwanese immigrant herds her boys as they plunder books from library shelves and toss them in the bag.

Sitting between her sons at a library table while they rifle through the books, she looks up words in an English-Cantonese dictionary and frets about any "no-good" English words they might read, speak or think.

"I no want to miss anything," explains Lin, who every Thursday morning, when her boys are in school, attends English language class at the Queens library. "If I don't learn about American culture and speak English, I could lose them. If they think I not understand, they not do what I say."

Book-obsessed, worrywart immigrants like Pin-Pin Lin are the driving reason why the Queens Public Library is far and away the busiest in the United States. Most library books in Queens do not go out of date. They wear out from overuse and fall to pieces.

The library circulates the nation's highest number of books, tapes and videos—15.3 million a year.

In the sprawling borough that lies across the East River from Manhattan, library card holders check out more books per capita than users of any big city library system in the country. The 1.95 million residents of Queens use the public library five times more frequently than residents of the District of Columbia, twice as often as residents of Prince George's County and a third more frequently than people in Montgomery County.

The Los Angeles library serves about 1.4 million more people than the Queens library, but last year people in Queens checked out 4 million more books.

"We have complaints all the time from our older clientele, who want quiet and who want space. Well, our libraries aren't quiet and, for the most part, they aren't spacious," says Gary Strong, director of the Queens Public Library, one of three public library networks in the city. There is also a library system in Brooklyn and the New York Public Library serves Manhattan, the Bronx and Staten Island.

"The people who use our library are highly motivated," Strong adds. "They want jobs. They want to learn how to live in America."

Queens has the highest percentage of foreign-born residents of any borough in New York, a city that at the end of the 20th century is sponging up one of the great waves of immigration in its history. Nearly half the residents of Queens speak a language other than English at home. More than a third were born in a foreign country.

The extraordinary love affair between immigrants and libraries is a century-old story in New York, as it is in other American cities that have been immigrant gateways. The most crowded libraries in New York have always been in neighborhoods with the largest population of recent immigrants.

That love affair continues at the end of the century, but with complications, especially in Queens. The book lovers who elbow each other for space in the library's 62 branches are more than ever before a mixed bunch—racially, linguistically and culturally.

The busiest branch in the nation's busiest library system is in Flushing, which has been inundated in the past decade with Chinese, Korean, Indian, Russian, Colombian and Afghan immigrants. Until a handsome new library building opens this summer, the Flushing branch is crammed into a former furniture store.

Inside, there are not nearly enough little chairs for all the little kids who wiggle and squeal and devour picture book after picture book. Stacks of blue plastic-coated foam pads are available so kids and parents can sit on the tile floor.

Queues form behind computer terminals that allow immigrants to search home country periodicals using Chinese, Korean and Roman writing systems. "Watch Your Belongings!" signs are in English, Spanish and Chinese.

There are no public bathrooms—space being too precious to waste on nonessentials. But there are librarians who speak Russian, Hindi, Chinese, Korean, Gujarati and Spanish.

"Have you ever wondered where the new South Asian materials are?" asks a sign taped to a pillar in the Flushing branch library. "Well, wonder no more. They're here! You can find materials in: Bengali, Gujarati, Hindi, Malayalam and Urdu."

"We have gone from a dozen countries to a hundred countries," says Strong. "We are not just waiting for them to come to us after they have solved all their problems, after they have a job and after they have the kids in school. We go after them. We advertise. We do not check their immigration status."

Immigration had already transformed Flushing from a staid middle-class Italian and Jewish community into a polyglot boom town when Ruth Herzburg took over eight years ago as library branch manager. Herzburg quickly discovered that the branch was falling behind the newcomer mix.

Herzburg tentatively put a small collection of Korean-language books out on a shelf five years ago. "Those books walked off the shelves. Before that, we didn't really know the Koreans were here," she said.

As immigrants make the transition from their native language to English, Herzburg says they hunger for basically the same kinds of books—translations of potboiler American fiction like Danielle Steel, self-help books and computer books. Many immigrants to Queens have technical skills, she says, and they demand science, technology and business books.

By spending more money per capita on books and other materials than any other major urban American library system, the Queens Public Library has marshaled its resources to seduce each new group of immigrants and lure them into the branches.

The seduction starts by sending library emissaries to immigrant associations that work with recent arrivals. In the languages of the immigrants, they explain how the library can show them how to get a driver's license, navigate the Internet and learn English. The library runs the largest English-as-a-second-language program in the country and says it could double its enrollment if it had more space and money.

"Starting with survival skills, they get introduced to the library and it is often the beginning of a lifelong habit," said Adriana Acauan Tandler, head of the library's New Americans program and herself an immigrant from Brazil.

Using census data and a demographer and by commissioning polls among Queens residents, the library has been able to spot holes in library usage. The biggest hole in the late 1980s was among Spanish speakers.

The library went after them with an aggressive public relations campaign. It translated applications for library cards into Spanish, purchased spots on Spanish radio and pulled together a Spanish collection of 100,000 items in 10 branches.

"In just three years, we found that Spanish speakers were using the library as much as anybody in the borough. They read everything from Cervantes to 'Superman.' The secret of our success is that we give people what they want, instead of what we think they should have," Acauan Tandler said.

What adults want, above all else, is translations of American bestsellers in their own language. The library tries to buy them quickly and in quantity. At the Flushing branch, the head librarian has about $125,000 a year to spend as she wishes on "hot" books.

"We don't wait for the central office to send out popular books. We like to go around to all the local bookstores and buy popular books off the shelves. All the books are in foreign languages. We don't even have an English-language bookstore in Flushing," said Herzburg.

Pin-Pin Lin tries to steer her boys, ages 10 and 13, away from Chinese-language books. She prefers they read only in English. To that end, she makes sure they leave the library after each visit with 20 or so English books in the shopping bag.

"I don't care if they read all. Kid is kid. If they don't like books, I bring them back and get more," said Lin.

From Common Market to Common Currency

Never in history have so many highly developed, culturally divergent countries decided to give up their national currencies and embrace a single one in a joint financial system. The idea of uniting

Europe rose from the wreckage of World War II, and began with reconciliation between archenemies France and Germany. Although many doubts have been voiced over the years that a united Europe would ever materialize, the enterprise has come a long way. This week, another major step toward integration is being taken when 11 of the EU's 15 members will join the euro.

HISTORY

OF THE EUROPEAN UNION

1950: A postwar plan to unite the traditionally feuding peoples of Europe is conceived by French Foreign Minister Robert Schuman.

1953: In first step, the European Coal and Steel Community is set up to place French and German coal and steel production under a common authority. Italy, Belgium, Netherlands and Luxembourg join.

1958: The European Economic Community is established in the Treaty of Rome, with the goal of creating a common market permitting free movement of people, goods, services and capital. The Rome treaty also establishes the European Atomic Energy Community. The three components are known as the European Community, popularly known as the Common Market.

1968: A customs union and common agricultural policy go into effect. EC labor force free to work in any EC country.

1973: Britain, Ireland and Denmark join the EC.

1981: The grouping expands southward when Greece joins.

1986: Portugal and Spain admitted.

1990: With German unification, the EC expands by another 18 million people.

1991: Treaty of economic and monetary union concluded at Maastricht, Netherlands. It also sets provisions for eventual political integration including common internal, judicial, foreign and security policy.

1993: The European single market becomes a reality for 345 million people. The grouping is now called the European Union. All border formalities end for goods, services and capital.

1995: Austria, Finland and Sweden join. (Norwegians, in a referendum, reject membership.)

6 FIRST GROUPING: Belgium, France, Germany, Italy, Luxembourg, the Netherlands

9 ADDED: Britain, Denmark, Ireland

10 ADDED: Greece

12 ADDED: Portugal, Spain

15 ADDED: Austria, Finland, Sweden

THE NEXT STEPS

■ May 2: The EU executive names the first group of countries that meet the criteria to participate in the common currency.

They are expected to be 11: Austria, Belgium, Finland, France, Germany, Italy, Ireland, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Portugal, Spain. (Britain, Denmark and Sweden choose not to join at this point. Greece does not qualify.)

■ The European Central Bank selects conversion rates among participating currencies; they will apply beginning in 1999.

Later in 1998:
■ Officials selected to govern the European Central Bank in Frankfurt, Germany, which will set monetary policy for the euro.

■ Production begins of euro banknotes and coins.

■ Preparations by governments, banks and financial institutions speed up; economies of member countries continue to function on basis of national currencies.

1999
■ Jan. 4: Euro begins trading against the dollar and other currencies in international currency markets. All debts and investments are denominated in both euros and national currencies.

■ The European Central Bank begins using euros for its monetary operations and public debt.

During the next 12 months of 1999:

■ The European Central Bank begins setting monetary and exchange-rate policy with non-EU countries.

■ National authorities in EU countries begin selling bonds and other deficit-financing notes in euros only.

Some companies are expected to change their transactions to euros, although banknotes will not be issued yet.

2002
■ Jan. 1: Euro banknotes and coins start circulation.

■ National governments complete the changeover to the euro.

■ July: The national currencies are canceled. The euro is the only currency in participating countries.

ALREADY IN EFFECT

Although many Europeans are grumbling over losing their national currencies and giving up authority to the "Brussels bureaucracy," they have become used to many daily activities that already are integrated. Among them are:

■ BORDERS: EU citizens traveling from one EU country to another no longer need to present documentation at crossing stations. Most crossing posts no longer operate.

■ PASSPORTS: Europeans of the 15 nations will carry the same passport with the specific country name printed below the EU designation in the native language. At airports, customs and passport control lines are separated into EU citizens and other nationalities.

■ WORK FORCE: 165 Frenchmen, for example, want to work in Britain; he may move with no formalities.

■ COMPANIES: A company can relocate from one EU country to another without legal barriers.

■ INVESTMENTS: All EU citizens may invest their money freely in any EU country.

Criteria for EU inclusion set forth in the 1991 treaty include:

- A budget deficit no greater than 3 percent of GDP.
- A national debt no greater than 60 percent of GDP.
- Limits on inflation and interest rates.
- Stable currencies.

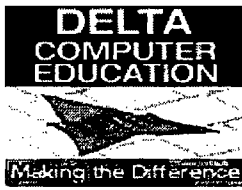

COMPARING	European Union	United States
Population	380 million	268 million
GNP	$8.0 trillion	$7.2 trillion
Income per person	(lowest in EU) Portugal: $10,160 (highest in EU) Denmark: $32,100	$28,020
Share of world trade	20.9%	19.6%
Export to GDP ratio	10.2%	8.2%

For Immigrant, A Billion-Dollar High-Tech Deal

Maryland Entrepreneur To Sell Firm He Founded

The classic dream of entrepreneurial America came true in Landover yesterday: Jeong Kim, a Korean-born immigrant who once worked the night shift at 7-Eleven to put himself through school, sold his company -- for $1 billion.

Under the deal, $510 million is to go to Kim, the rest to the other shareholders of Yurie Systems Inc., a maker of advanced communications equipment. His share would put him on Fortune magazine's list of the 100 richest high-tech executives in the country, ahead of such magnates as Sun Microsystems Inc. chief executive Scott McNealy and Intel Corp. chief Andrew S. Grove.

"I had always felt I wasn't the smartest," the 37-year-old Kim said in a telephone interview yesterday. So he compensated by working impossibly long hours -- 120 a week early on, he said. "People can look at someone like me," he said. "They see someone who looks different, who speaks with a funny accent. And maybe they'll say, if I set my goals high, maybe I can succeed like that, too."

Kim and Yurie (he named it after his eldest daughter) are the most dramatic example to date of the wealth being generated wholesale by the technology companies that dot the Capital Beltway, employing close to a quarter million people. Companies born from government contracts, such as Yurie, are expanding into the commercial world in such fields as software and the Internet.

Removed from the staid and insular world of retail, banking and real estate firms that once dominated the region's economy, they are transforming the area into a fertile entrepreneurial zone.

"Yurie is a billboard ad for America being a nation of immigrants and a place of opportunity," said James Woolsey, former director of the CIA and a member of the Yurie board of directors.

Financed by maxed-out credit cards and second mortgages, and getting some initial help from a government program for minority-owned businesses, Kim built Yurie in just five years into a world leader in an emerging field of advanced data-transmission known as "asynchronous transfer mode."

The company makes a gizmo that is much sought after by companies seeking less expensive ways to handle voice and data transmissions.

Its main product, dubbed the "Yurie box," is an electronic device that helps transmit data, voice and video feeds over the same computer network. This allows for faster and more efficient communications.

The company's growth has consistently defied expectations: Yurie's most recent quarterly profits increased 456 percent to $3.8 million, compared with the quarter a year earlier, while sales soared 127 percent to $19.1 million. Today it accounts for 28 percent of what's still a relatively small market -- $122 million in sales per year for asynchronous transfer equipment, according to market research firm Vertical Systems Group.

But the prospects for the company and the market seem so attractive that telephone equipment manufacturer Lucent Technologies Inc. made Kim the $1 billion offer he couldn't refuse. The deal is subject to regulatory approval.

The rocket ascendency of the company, which today employs 240 people at offices near the Landover Metro station, is closely entwined with Kim's immigrant struggle.

He arrived in Anne Arundel County from Seoul with his parents when he was 14. He attended class during the day and worked the counter at a 7-Eleven at night so he could go to college.

Some classmates teased him because of his accent and Asian heritage, Kim recalled yesterday in a phone interview. "People who are successful are often those who feel they have something to prove," Kim said. Still, he added, "I got to a point where I was essentially comfortable with myself," and he embarked doggedly on a mission to build his own company.

Kim won a scholarship to study electrical engineering at Johns Hopkins University, graduated in three years, then earned a PhD in engineering from the University of Maryland in only two. He spent seven years as an officer on a United States Navy nuclear submarine.

After leaving the Navy, Kim worked as a contract engineer for AlliedSignal Inc. at the Naval Research Laboratory. There he came up with an idea on how to use asynchronous transfer technology to give the military something long on its wish list: multimedia communications with the battlefield in the form of instant voice, data and video feeds from international hot spots.

At the laboratory, he was encouraged in his idea by associate director Herbert Rabin, who had been an associate dean at the University of Maryland engineering school.

Kim left AlliedSignal and created Yurie in 1992, under the name Integrated Systems Technologies, as an "8a" company that qualified for the Small Business Administration's minority-preference program. A company spokesman, however, said Yurie has never sought or received any government contracts through the program because Kim "does not believe in" such government help.

General Services Administration records show that the company did receive a $305,000 Defense Department contract through a separate program for small, minority-owned businesses.

Helped by Rabin's contacts, Yurie amassed a top-drawer board of directors that includes, along with former CIA chief Woolsey, former defense secretary William Perry and Kenneth Brody, former head of the Export-Import Bank.

The company captured the attention of Pentagon brass almost immediately: A prototype Yurie box strapped to a Jeep was used to pipe video pictures of polling booths during 1995 elections in Haiti. Yurie equipment also saw action in Bosnia.

Soon, the firm was attracting attention from big companies. In 1995, Yurie signed an exclusive deal with AT&T Corp.'s equipment division, which later became Lucent, to market its products to federal agencies.

After $6 million of sales through that channel, Kim got AT&T to drop its exclusivity requirement and struck separate sales deals with other big equipment companies such as Bay Networks Inc., Ericsson Inc. and Lucent. Yurie found itself supplying the world in a very fast-growing market. Last year, it sold its first shares to the public.

Lucent officials said yesterday that Yurie's headquarters would remain in Landover and that no layoffs were planned. Kim will become president of Lucent's carrier networks division, which will include the former Yurie.

Yurie's stock rose $3.25 to close at $34.75 yesterday, while Lucent fell $1.43 3/4 to $71.93 3/4.

Kim avoids any hint that his success will change him. An avid racquetball player, Kim said he had always made a point of playing people who are better than he is and will continue that approach. "I always try to win, but losing teaches me humility," he said.

Clinton administration supports bilingual education

WASHINGTON (April 28, 1998 11:25 a.m. EDT <http://www.nando.net>) -- A California ballot measure that would dismantle the state's bilingual education programs is not based on sound research or policy, say Clinton administration officials who are campaigning against it.

President Clinton and other administration officials plan to travel to California to urge residents to reject the measure, which goes before voters on June 2, said Marshall Smith, the Education Department's acting deputy secretary.

Proposition 227, written by Silicon Valley millionaire and unsuccessful gubernatorial candidate Ron Unz, would require children with limited ability to speak English to be taught "overwhelmingly" in English for a year before being moved into regular classrooms. Supporters say the current system takes too long and produces children who never become proficient in English.

Statewide polls show about 60 percent of voters support the proposition, including about half of the Hispanic voters polled.

Replacing the state's multiplicity of bilingual education programs with a one-year course of instruction mostly in English would leave schoolchildren without needed skills, including those that will help them find jobs in the future, Smith said Monday.

"The best data that we have, the best research that we have suggests that the one-year immersion structure ... is a major mistake," he said.

Instead, the administration is calling for an alternative strategy -- setting the nationwide goal of limiting most children's participation in bilingual programs to three years.

The three-year limitation would be a goal, not a requirement, the department said. Current law calls for, but does not require, non-English-speaking children to go through three to five years of bilingual education, Smith said.

In a written statement, Education Secretary Richard Riley said that Proposition 227, also called the Unz Amendment, "is not the way to go."

"In my opinion, adoption of the Unz Amendment will lead to fewer children learning English and many children falling further behind in their studies," he said.

Today, Sheri Annis, a spokeswoman for English for the Children, the group sponsoring the initiative, said leaders were "disappointed that the president chose to ignore the wishes of a majority of Californians, including a majority of the Latino population. ... If he had a chance to see that California is not preparing its next generation to be competitive in business and commerce by giving our children a substandard, segregated education, we believe he would change his mind."

Across the nation, about 3.2 million students have limited English skills, and 1.3 million are in local and state bilingual programs, the Education Department said. The number of limited-English students has nearly doubled in less than a decade. Of some 5 million California public school students in kindergarten through the 12th grade, about 1.4 million have limited English proficiency.

When asked Monday whether he supported Proposition 227, California Gov. Pete Wilson said he hadn't made a decision, but added, "I'm strongly leaning that way." He also accused the president of using the issue to play politics.

"I frankly think he has no business, I think the U.S. Department of Education has no business, substituting his judgment for that of the people of California," Wilson said.

The White House said it's unclear whether Clinton will say anything about the proposition during a trip to the state this weekend.

White House spokesman Mike McCurry said the California vote could affect bilingual programs nationwide. "There's some reason to believe that federal bilingual education programs are at some risk because of measures pending in Congress that would cut funding for those programs," McCurry said.

Smith said Proposition 227 does not appear to be unconstitutional on its face, but officials trying to implement it could run afoul of federal civil rights laws that require school districts to make sure students with limited English skills can effectively participate in regular education program offerings.

The International National Pastime

By Omar Minaya

If you go to a Mets game this season you might see a Japanese pitcher (Masato Yoshii) wind up and deliver the ball to a Dominican catcher (Albert Castillo). An African-American might hit that pitch to a Venezuelan third baseman (Edgardo Alfonzo), who will throw the ball to a Puerto Rican second baseman (Carlos Baerga), who will relay it to a white first baseman from Washington State (John Olerud) to complete a perfect double play.

Baseball, as many have noticed, has become an international game, with a distinctly Latin flavor. In 1997, the most valuable player in the World Series was Livan Hernandez (Cuba). The National League's leader in runs batted in was Andres Galarra (Venezuela). And the best earned run average among National League pitchers was posted by Pedro Martinez (Dominican Republic). True, the league's regular season m.v.p., Larry Walker, is not from Latin America. He's from Canada.

Some worry that the national pastime is being overtaken by foreigners. In fact, these new players have restored flair and passion to the game. While young athletes in the United States grow up playing many sports, baseball remains No. 1 in Latin America, and the dream of reaching the major leagues is very much alive there.

In 1985 I went to Puerto Plata in the Dominican Republic to scout a 16-year-old named Sammy Sosa, who came from San Pedro de Macoris, a town famous for producing major leaguers. Sosa was so skinny and weak that I suspected he was malnourished, as is sometimes the case with Latin American players, many of whom come from impoverished backgrounds.

Four years later, Sosa made it to the big leagues. He must have put on 25 pounds his rookie season. Now he's one of the game's top sluggers.

There are many more unpolished gems like him, destined for the majors.

The lesson hasn't been lost on big league owners. There are currently 88 major leaguers from the Dominican Republic, more than come from any state except California. And those teams that decided in the 1980's and early 1990's not to pursue Latin American players aggressively paid the price with poor won-lost records and low attendance figures.

On the field, baseball has evolved into an international game. The time has come for the major leagues to reach out in other ways to those countries that have supplied the game with so many stars.

We've made strides through initiatives like the player-development academies owned and operated in Latin America by big league clubs. Right now, most of these are in the Dominican Republic. The country's summer league has also proved a vital source of player development. So have winter league teams in Puerto Rico, Venezuela and Mexico. And two years ago, Monterrey, Mexico, was the site of a three-game series between the New York Mets and the San Diego Padres, the first major league games ever played outside the United States and Canada.

But there is more baseball can do to create a partnership with Latin American countries. Currently major league owners, general managers and the players' union hold their annual meetings at locations inside the United States. A group of Latin American baseball executives has petitioned the Commissioner's Office to hold its annual general managers' meeting in the Dominican Republic.

This would send a positive message to Latin America and the world that in every way baseball has evolved into a truly global game. After all the thrills we've been treated to through the years from the likes of Juan Marichal, Felipe Alou, Dennis Martinez and many others, it's the least we can do. □

Dear Ms. Williams,

I just spoke with you about obtaining the rosters of the U.S. Olympic teams dating back to the beginning in 1896. I am an intern in the speechwriting office of the White House doing a research project. These lists of names would greatly enhance my project. Would you please fax the rosters for the Summer Olympics of 1896, 1920, 1972 and 1996? And if it wouldn't be too much trouble would you also send the roster for the 1998 Winter Games? I greatly appreciate your help with this project, especially under a time constraint. If you could send these rosters by the close of business tomorrow that would be great. Thank you.

Sincerely,

NOTES: From our database - here's 1896 & 1920 (easier than copying from books)

I will fax 1952 & 1972 later (added 52 for you)

- Here's 1952 - Note how many teams some were on for reference

* -> And 1972 - That's it - 100's of pages later! (to both years)

If you have any questions or problems receiving the transmission, please contact the USOC Media & Public Affairs Division at: (719) 578-4529

Now you can see how all years would have been about 600 pages at least!

vigorated civil society can thus rehabilitate democratic government in the Western nations, whose citizens now hold it in ill-repute, and it can create a ground for democratization that does not remind people of the intrusive totalitarian past in nations where the state is still associated with the taint of enduring historical abuses.

Finally, strong democratic civil society invokes civic faith to sustain vanishing religious faith and common mores. We might yearn for the solidarity of a traditional blood community or the common values of a homogenous society that resembles Braveheart's colorfully monochrome Scotland or Joan of Arc's united France. We live, however, in societies that have been striated by successive waves of immigration and the constant tides of global labor mobility. Germany is nearly ten percent foreign and is becoming a reluctant "melting pot."³ Five million Muslims live permanently in Catholic France, while the United States measured by its population under twenty-five is already a country of myriad minorities but no majority. Even were it compatible with freedom, blood can no longer bind the national community together—not here in America, not anywhere.

Civic faith, what the German social philosopher Jürgen Habermas calls constitutional patriotism, is the only available social glue, thin as it sometimes feels. Richard Rorty is sure that in our thin liberal societies today this glue "consists in little more than a consensus that the point of social organization is to let everybody have a chance at self-creation to the best of his or her abilities, and that goal requires . . . the standard 'bourgeois freedoms.'"⁴ But I think Abraham Lincoln was much closer to the mark. In his 1858 July 4 Speech, he proposed that in an immigrant society moral sentiment might do the work of blood and do it well. When Americans not descended directly from the founders "look back through . . . history to trace their connection with those [founding] days by blood, they find they have none," Lincoln acknowledged. Nonetheless, when they "look through that old Declaration of Independence they find that those old men say that 'we hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal,' and . . . that moral sentiment . . . is the father of all moral principle in them, and . . . they have a right to claim it as though they were blood of the blood, and flesh of the flesh, of men who wrote that Declaration, and so they are." We, too—we Americans of a hundred ethnic origins, we French who share at most a common language, we Nigerians of the many different tribes, we Muslims of scores of nationalities—we, too, have the right to claim civic principle as if we are blood of the blood and pledge common principle as if we were flesh of the flesh, for in claiming and pledging in this manner, we are bonded together in a society that sets us free.

To re-create civil society on the model of strong democracy does not entail a novel civic architecture, at least in many Western nations; rather, civil society requires us to reconceptualize and reposition the institutions already in place. Where a civic sector already exists, we must deploy civic strategies and laws to give it room to grow and flourish. Where it exists only as an ideal, we must suggest strategies that help to seed civic institutions and then help them to grow. And where it is entirely absent (in the international sector), it must be reinvented.

These must be strategies that permit schools, foundations, community movements, the media, and other civil associations to reclaim a public voice and political legitimacy in the face of cynics who write them off as hypocritical special interests. I hope to give the otherwise abstract idea of a public voice a real place, an actual geography, somewhere other than in the atlas of government. Finally, I will suggest, government is essential in helping to create civic space, in protecting it from bureaucratic encroachment (whether public or private), and in nurturing its animating discourse. If democratic civil society is the sine qua non of democratic government, democratic government is the indispensable condition of its flourishing. Middle Europe's fledgling democratic insti-

2 Corinthians 4:8-

We are hard pressed on every side, but not crushed; perplexed, but not in despair; (9) persecuted, but not abandoned; struck down, but not destroyed. (10) We always carry around in our body the death of Jesus, so that the life of Jesus may also be revealed in our body. (11) For we who are alive are always being given over to death for Jesus's sake, so that his life may be revealed in our mortal body. (12) So then, death is at work in us, but life is at work in you.

(13) It is written: "I believed; therefore I have spoken." With that same spirit of faith we also believe and therefore speak, (14) because we know that the one who raised the Lord Jesus from the dead will also raise us with Jesus and present us with you in his presence. (15) All this is for your benefit, so that the grace that is reaching more and more people may cause thanksgiving to overflow to the glory of God.

(16) Therefore we do not lose heart. Though outwardly we are wasting, yet inwardly we are being renewed day by day. (17) For our light and momentary troubles are achieving for us an external glory that far outweighs them all. (18) So we fix our eyes not on what is seen, but on what is unseen. For what is seen is temporary, but what is unseen is eternal.

2 Corinthians 6:3-

We put no stumbling block in anyone's path, so that our ministry will not be discredited. (4) Rather, as servants of God we commend ourselves in every way: in great endurance, in troubles, hardships and distresses, (5) in beatings, imprisonments and riots; in hard work, sleepless nights and hunger, (6) in purity, understanding, patience and kindness; in the Holy Spirit and in sincere love; (7) in truthful speech and in the power of God; with weapons of righteousness in the right hand and in the left; (8) through glory and dishonor, bad report and good report; genuine, yet regarded as impostors; (9) known, yet regarded as unknown; dying, and yet we live on; beaten, and yet not killed; (10) sorrowful, yet always rejoicing; poor, yet making many rich; having nothing, and yet possessing everything.

2 Corinthians 7:11 When he wrote about suffering, Paul concentrated not merely on the pain itself, but on what qualities it produced in those who had faith. In this case, he cites the emotional suffering the Corinthians had experienced because of his letter. Although the suffering was unpleasant, it produced something of great value: an abrupt change in their attitudes.

"See what this godly sorrow has produced in you: what earnestness, what eagerness to clear yourselves, what indignation, what alarm, what longing, what concern, what readiness to see justice done. At every point you have proved yourselves to be innocent in this matter."
